MANGANESE BOOM GOES AND SO DOES THE TOWN

(By Associated Press)
MISSOULA, Mont., Feb. 17.—From a little strip of ground not more than one and one-quarter miles long and with an extreme width of half a mile was mined more than 45 per cent of the gross of manganese produced during the period of the war, according to the United States geological survey.

The little town of Philipsburg, which is a part of this strip, was for a month a bustling center of industry. From nearly a score of shafts and tunnels into the brown mountains this most precious war metal—one used so extensively and one which is invaluable in the manufacture of the best steel—poured in a constant stream to be sent to the mills throughout the country where the instruments of war were produced.

Now Philipsburg gradually is slipping back to "normal" and save for the unfilled contracts of some of the mines which will be completed two months hence, work in the manufacture of the Philipsburg district is entirely suspended.

The region containing merchantable manganese lies directly along the northern and easterly contact between the sedimentary and granitic formations there. Throughout the whole of it there is a conspicuous alteration due to contact metamorphism. According to the opinions of scientists who have studied the locality thoroughly, the time at which the manganese was deposited, called the "period of deposition," was probably during the pre-Tertiary period.

The alteration referred to is confined to the sedimentary rocks, and in the formation the manganese ore is found. They not only occur in bedded deposits upon anticlines dipping into the contact, but in the easterly and westerly fissures, bearing silver, lead and zinc ores occurring in the sedimentary country, entering the contact, which is from 20 to 30 feet wide but apparently not penetrating into the granite formation.

When the demand was made for manganese by the war industries board, acting under the provisions of the war minerals bill which was enacted to stimulate production and to regulate the price of metals essential in the manufacture of war materials, the manganese of this district came into immediate demand. Right development showed large and rich deposits of it.

The production from the Philipsburg quadrangle since the beginning of the mining and shipment of the raw material probably will exceed 200,000 tons.

The manganese is found to constitute the ledge-filling of the fissures as they approach the contact. Associated with it at the time of its discovery was the rich silver ore of the Trout group, Algonquin, True, Elmore and other producers, lying within the area noted. The crosscut south from the 400-foot station of the Algonquin shaft, which is its greatest depth, cut 20 or more feet of the ore, this being part of the ledge filling.

Presumably the body continues downward, but as it had no value at the time, no attempt was made to determine the fact. It therefore, is assumed by mining men that the manganese is to be found in depth in all of the fissures lying within the metamorphosed area.

Most of the members will arrive here late next month. It is believed, from Nome, Seward, Fairbanks, Anchorage, Nenana, Cordova, Ketchikan and other cities in the territory. Most of the Nome members spent the winter in Seattle in order to avoid the trip out over the snow trail this spring.

ALASKA ENCOURAGES MINE INVESTMENTS

(By Associated Press)
JUNEAU, Alaska, Jan. 15.—(By Mail)—Steps to encourage industrial and mining activity in Alaska probably will be taken by the territory legislature which convenes here March 3, 1919.

Few proposed legislative plans have been announced yet. Alaska hopes this year to witness the return of many of the hundreds who went to the states in 1917 and 1918, so it is probable that the legislature will endeavor to provide employment for them and for hundreds of others who are expected to come north.

The legislature probably will appropriate money for the operation of the new Alaska agricultural college and school of mines at Fairbanks. If the money is appropriated the college probably will open its first semester next fall. Pensions for pioneer Alaskan men and women are also held up awaiting a legislative appropriation.

Democrats will control the legislature as they number five in the senate to the Republicans' three and twelve in the house of representatives to the Republicans' four.

Most of the members will arrive here late next month. It is believed, from Nome, Seward, Fairbanks, Anchorage, Nenana, Cordova, Ketchikan and other cities in the territory. Most of the Nome members spent the winter in Seattle in order to avoid the trip out over the snow trail this spring.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 1st day of March, 1919, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Tuesday, the 15th day of April, 1919, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with the cost of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors
CHARLES D. OLNEY, Secretary.
Office, Room 265 Russ Building, San Francisco, California. F16M1
